

Conditions for the reproduction and translation of IDF publications

The International Diabetes Federation (IDF) would like its publications to reach all those who can benefit from them and therefore welcomes requests to use, reproduce and/or translate IDF material. However, permission to use, reproduce and/or translate material is subject to the following conditions:

1. The IDF holds copyright to any reproduced or translated material.
2. In the case of full-length reproductions or translations, an IDF copyright notice must be included in the reproduced or translated material.
3. In the case of full-length reproductions or translations, IDF guidelines on the use of the IDF logo must be respected. The guidelines will be provided on request by IDF.
4. In the case of full-length reproductions or translations, any additional logo(s) appearing in the original IDF publication should also appear in the reproduction or translation. It will be the responsibility of the applicant to consult with the owners of the additional logo(s).
5. In the case of full-length reproductions or translations, the reproduced or translated document must contain an ISBN number, which can be obtained from the IDF Communications Manager.
6. In the case of full-length reproductions or translations, the Corporate Partners who sponsored the original publication shall be credited in the acknowledgments page.
7. The reproduced or translated material shall correspond in content to the original publication.
8. In the case of full-length reproductions or translations, in so far as possible, the design of the reproduced or translated material should correspond to the IDF publication's design.
9. It will be the responsibility of the applicant to seek permission for artwork appearing in the original publication, which the IDF does not hold copyright for.
10. The final proof of reproductions or translations must be shown to and approved by the IDF Communications Manager before publication.
11. In the case of extracts, articles, or chapters from IDF-copyrighted material, the reproduced or translated material should be referenced to acknowledge the IDF as the source, indicating clearly the title and date of publication.
12. No advertisement should appear together with the reproduced or translated material.
13. A copyright fee may have to be paid to the IDF.
14. A copy of the reproduced or translated material will be sent to IDF after publication.